Thursday, August 31, 2000 - 10:00 a.m.

Try to make my son benefit from a few successive messages that complete each other. He will appreciate following the thread of our exchanges, insofar as he is as much concerned as you by this matter. This long trip was tiring for him, but was very positive. If he cannot indeed evaluate the importance of the trip in terms of results, we confirm the resulting impact to him, even in France where his absence created a salutary vacuum. Humans are made like that; they get used to easiness. The cancellation of his stay in Augerans rushed abhyasis in the right direction. My son did a very good job; he can be satisfied. He must curb his work. It is essential that he spare himself to continue to perform his duties in the best conditions. He is not a machine, and periods of reduced activities are necessary for his balance. We help him as much as possible and support him in all his doings. Thank our partners who put so much heart into translating these writings."

Babuji