Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, October 30, 2012 — 10:00 a.m.

There is still so much to say; human beings forget so quickly that repetitions are often necessary on key issues. This is the case in our Mission: forgetting is one thing, interpreting in one's own way and distorting our teachings is a different one. All spiritual and religious movements have witnessed and are still witnessing behaviours that have nothing to do with the original teachings. Ours are simple but effective. One just needs to stay on the straight line of the practice without any other artifice or additions according to each one's way of being. Rigidity does not lead to what is essential. Here, only the heart must speak, and feed on the Divine in a way of love, without any obsession of what is on the plate. Purity of heart and intention is by far what is most important; extremism is not in line with our original teaching.

"We sincerely hope our way will remain like that: divested of behaviours that have nothing to do with the reality of a path that is meant to lead beings to the state of purity of the soul. We want the best for our faithful and sincere abhyasis who are fully committed to a subtle quest whose ultimate goal is unalterable peace. The way is simple; love and surrender to the Master are of paramount importance to attain bliss. Nothing is obtained easily; in this matter, more than others, the goal does not lie within the material plane. The goal is prepared here below in accordance with the rules that govern a quest of this nature, but the implications go far beyond reality — they develop and confirm the future of the seeker in an approach of this kind. 'All is nothing, God is everything', this encapsulates what a spiritual practice is; we give the keys and the means of using them wisely. Purity of heart and intent as well as perseverance attract our attention and constant blessings. It is up to each one to understand and act according to their heart."
