Whispers from The Brighter World

Our continual repetitions are purposeful; who among our abhyasis is perfect and holds the truth? We want the best for each and all, and that they truly integrate our comments according to their capacity and not in a superficial manner that is limited to form. All sacred texts are repetitive. Truth is both one and manifold; each person grasps it according to their ability to go beyond the letter of the text. The aim is to lead the reader to go deeper inwardly, starting from a text whose sole purpose is to educate our brothers and sisters about the reality of the subtle being. These repetitions are meant to take him deeper into the understanding of phenomena and of what is essential to effectively progress in one's incarnation.

"We offer everything possible to help our abhyasis better grasp a very special system that is offered at the present time for good reason. We cannot convince them all; not everyone has the same potential. What deeply touches one of them may go completely unnoticed by the other who does not have the same sensitivity at that specific moment of reading. Tomorrow things may be different, and that aspirant will then discover the deeper meaning of seemingly trifling comments that didn't mean anything to him the day before. A human being is like that; hence these constant and necessary repetitions.

"We are doing the best for everyone; it works out well for our fervent readers. Our comments are simple, it is true, but this is purposeful.

"This is not a piece of literature, and it is not meant to be appreciated as such — we stand far beyond that kind of writing. It is up to each one to interiorise themselves enough to grasp what is essential and given here for that purpose.

"Blessings to all."
