Sunday, October 15, 2000 – 10:00 a.m.

Pollution from electricity has drawn your attention for a long time. It is devastating, and human beings suffer the consequences in their subtle bodies, which then pass them on to the physical body. The Earth is surrounded by a kind of net which seriously harms the gaseous exchange. This results in disturbances affecting the whole of the biosphere. These phenomena are felt all the way down to the infinitely small. Your energies try to adapt to these turbulences. Certain areas of the world are more affected than others. The oceans play an important role; they represent an enormous amount of water, which neutralises part of this pervading negativity, but there are limits to this process.

"The polarity of the Earth, which is necessary for its balance, is being permanently thwarted.

"New energies will have to be used in the future, for the good of the planet and its inhabitants. Cries of alarm have been put forth for years by enlightened researchers, whose pronouncements have received no follow-up. Only absolute necessity will force decisions by those countries who hold the greatest power. There remains a long way to lead human beings to greater wisdom. The supremacy of money is boundless. May good decisions be made in time, for the good of humanity."

Babuji