The time of deliverance will come, a time of peace and elevation of the human race, but it is not for tomorrow. Much remains to be done; the world is too focused on high-tech feats. These technologies destabilise ways of life in many respects even if they provide a level of convenience in this domain that has rarely been achieved on Earth. Other worlds are more evolved and exceed by far the methods used here. Only the power of the Spirit is creative, and no other method can match it; in addition, it is non-polluting and does not destabilise human energy – [such destabilisation] is the scourge of modern times. Few people realise this and care about the damage caused here and elsewhere. Only a massive cataclysm will bring this world back to non-destructive methods. Some civilisations have already paid a high price for such exploits whereby the sensitive nature of humans was constantly strained.

Many people of this time may not understand these comments. We are not old-fashioned; we can see perfectly how far this 'progress' can go, and the situation is alarming. The effects produced in this area go well beyond this world, affecting other types of life in addition to those on Earth. Only the raging elements will bring humans to reason. The laws of life are inescapable; they do not conform to the systems that are devised by humans at the expense of a necessary balance. This movement is in the making and difficult to stop; we can only observe and help in our own manner.

That is the way it is. May all our brothers and sisters move forward with faith and ardour.
