Whispers from The Brighter World

Friday, August 17, 2012 — 10:00 a.m.

Life is a continual struggle; an incarnation is a testing process, an opportunity for humans to surpass themselves and conquer within themselves a sacred space where their spiritual potential can be expressed. Our way is helping abhyasis towards this end, according to their commitment, receptivity and loyalty towards the Master and towards a method whose effects bear significant fruit, whether visible or not. The experience of becoming incarnate is daunting in its implications, and understanding the need to act for the good, for one's own good, is a definite advantage.

How many lives does it take to rise, to adjust to that which must be, in the strict sense of this term? May all our aspirants understand the need to act for their own evolution. Time is short for everyone; "the way of the heart" is offered to them with a method and a means to thus advance at their own pace. It is up to them to understand it and experience a sensible approach to the truth from a human being's perspective. Each person has their own potential, their own faith, and the perseverance that befits such a process. It is said that one day "the divine goal will be achieved" — that is the context in which this way is offered, together with the living Master's very specific action associated with the aspirant's practice. All are advancing at their own pace and are helped appropriately, even if the results are not obvious. Hearts are being significantly changed, for some more than others, depending on each person's commitment and faith.

Constant blessings to all!
