Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, April 9, 2014 – 10:00 a.m.

Trials are never useless; each of them, in its own way, builds on foundations that are unique to each personality. Every step is decisive; having an objective is important, and the highest is the search for the Divine – the eternal quest. The world of the Spirit is so vast that no human being can say what it is; the heart is the best guide in spiritual matters – it does not deceive. The aspirations of the soul persist over time, and this thread runs through successive lives, affirming the personality of each being. From birth, the broad outlines emerge in spite of the social environment and its characteristics. An incarnate being develops itself in a way that is most suitable for achieving its objective.

Following a spiritual path like ours is an indication of a real aspiration for the Divine. Many detours may be necessary to find the true way – that which corresponds precisely to the stages marking one's destiny. The seeker is guided; when the aspiration for the Divine is there, everything happens at the right time. It can take a long time to understand and then seize the opportunities that lead the human being on his or her own path. Each incarnation contributes to this sacred edifice that will ultimately defy time. On Earth, everything is precarious. Beyond this world, life continues and pursues its trajectory against all odds, according to plans – those that are inescapable. None build their lives exactly as they wish; as for the broad outlines, they are respected, and there lies each person's destiny. This is how it is.
