My son is in France once again and your paths don't cross. You don't meet, but thought unites you further. This short stay is beneficial to him. He likes returning to this region that regenerates him. He will soon peruse the messages and his reaction will be favourable. This correspondence is becoming important for him; an encouragement from us reassures him. At whatever level we may be, we all need to be recognized by our Masters. He feels alone on this Earth; it is a point that he shares with a lot of incarnate beings. He is a high level Master and he doesn't escape the rule. Sooner or later, it is what each of you feels, generally in the least easy periods of life. The heart aspires to go back to the harbour, consciously or not; a feeling of emptiness is experienced. Once the long journey is completed, the return to less hostile places is the expected reward. Then, another quest begins..."
