Whispers from The Brighter World

Tuesday, May 19, 2015 – 10:00 a.m.

There will always be something to be said; repetition, as we have said many times, is the very principle of life on this Earth. The Mission is in some sense entering a new era; it will thus adapt itself in the future to what will be called for in this world, quite naturally. What matters is to work from day to day to achieve the best – in oneself, around oneself and for the multitude. The egregore of this spiritual way is both expanding and becoming stronger; it will mark these times in such a way that traces of it will be kept very, very far into the future. This world is bound to go through substantial changes; nothing is immutable here below. Human beings also change. Imperceptibly their cells are adapting to subtle vibrations not yet perceived by researchers. Highly evolved beings are feeling this and adapting in their own manner to these necessary changes. The human being has changed so much through these unparalleled journeys. The caveman, as he is called, would be astounded in the face of this metamorphosis, and it is not over yet. What matters is the present time. One must hold onto it and appreciate what is being offered now – the possibilities are great in every respect.

Let us come back to this beautiful Mission of Sahaj Marg, supported by so many of our abhyasis; incarnate or not, they continue to work for the good of all. The Masters, too, are particularly attentive to the progress of Sahaj Marg, wanted by the higher powers. Thus, all is well, under our blessings.
