Friday, July 14, 2000 - 10:00 a.m.

This type of communication with us would be, for my son, a plus to the contacts we already have by other means. You know how much everything that comes from a beloved one is precious. That is why we keep on retelling him all our love and our recognition for what he performs. Make necessary arrangements to have what relates to him sent to him. This would perhaps incite him to take action as we expect him to do. Barriers that separate you are fictional. You both are sensible, discreet and embarrassed by a certain type of timidity that someone cannot perceive when they watch you live. You must overcome this sort of handicap; it would be for us a big joy to see you together. Humans put barriers where they are not worth putting by often concealing their very rich natures. We make this last attempt hoping that sooner or later it will be followed through."

Babuji