Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, October 11, 1998 – 10:20 a.m.

(For Jean-Michel and Claire.)

Claire's father is departing gently. He is not suffering much; that is important.

The passage will be easy. We will await him. This extended stay on Earth was given to him for his evolution, all is well. If you need to, take a break, my son, until things become clearer, but above all don't stop; the Mission needs you. You have made great strides; it would be a pity to stop. Settle your affairs as well as possible and do the needful for your health. You will then make a fresh start. We will guide you. Don't either of you lose heart, you are not forgotten; only our views are not yours. Take heart as regards this transformation which, in the final analysis, will benefit you. We bless you in your endeavours. You have done the right thing and you will do so in the future. Remain on this path that is beneficial to your evolution.

My daughter, convey all this to him and tell him that we love him. He has done a lot for the Mission and he still has work ahead. We are near them. Blessings to the three of you.
