Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, March 27, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Come and drink the divine nectar; is it not the most beautiful thing a human can do, to quench one's thirst at this pure chalice? You aspire to close this series with a lofty thought, so let us flee for a moment the tragedies of the Earth and rise towards the Immutable. This is your true goal here below, never lose sight of it. The only asset you will take with you is your spiritual attainment. Let your heart go, my daughter, do not torture your mind, thinking what others will say while reading you. Forget all that, none of it matters; do you know that at one time some considered me a simpleton?

Rise above it all, elevate yourself above human baseness. Remember this: 'attract us and we come running'. Draw your friends in your wake and run together. Why do you always put up barriers for yourself, such as: I cannot say or write this? Stop reacting like that. Write what we ask you to write. You are not a preceptor. You are a case apart in Sahaj Marg. Do not refer to the conventional discourse. Rest assured, you have my support; stick to your role, that's all we ask of you. Spend this day in the peace of the soul.
