Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, April 4, 1999 – 4:00 p.m.

[Easter]

My daughter, you are making great strides; may this keep your morale up. All the beautiful outings can leave imperishable memories, but what is that? You have come far enough to understand the precariousness of the joys of this world.

We understand that you are feeling a twinge of sorrow while being isolated during these holidays. Think of all the trips you have made, which only left you with images in your mind and a few reminders of annoying incidents.

All is but illusion in this world.

Not attaching more importance to the good times than to the bad is a sign of great wisdom.
