Whispers from The Brighter World

Sunday, April 11, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

Sahaj Marg can also mean 'the way of the wise ones' – wise enough to come and become wise if they are not sufficiently so.

Perhaps one day you will all understand how fortunate you were to have arrived in front of this gate. That is not a matter of chance, your destiny had thus decided.

What do you become once past this gate? It all depends on your inner disposition. You know that ours is a path of freedom. We do not impose any constraint on you, apart from the personal work that you do at your convenience.

To advance in a spiritual work is not to lock oneself up in fetters.

Your sadhana must lead you to a blossoming on all levels. This is important; there is no external pressure. It is you who decide how much, active or not, it suits you to take on. While practising, you must feel happy, for our greatest joy.

Don't forget that we, your Masters, are but one.

We are three entities, at once distinct and yet forming One at the divine level. This is another aspect of the mergence that is not easy to understand.

We are, in some way, a three-headed body; this notion is fundamental. Whatever your receptivity on this subject, advancing is the most important thing.

We are only trying to make you all glimpse a certain reality.

Imagine yourselves, melted in us, forming but one heart beating to the rhythm of the universe.

That's all for today, my child.
