Whispers from The Brighter World

Wednesday, June 30, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Forget your body, it will forget you. Try to plunge deeper and deeper inside yourself to find moments of respite, work on that.

Don't worry about this house that you saw yesterday. Live the present moment, haven't I told you this enough? Let J-M know that it is in Manapakkam that he will find me again.

The charge of this place, which is unique, can rejuvenate him; he needs that.

Transmit this to him: the house he knew is empty, except for the memory he has kept of it. Tell him also that this new ashram has become a high place of Sahaj Marg, and that at each step he will find me there.

My dear daughter, I know how much this confinement saddens you.

After leaving this world, you will see this prodigious place. It is charged and will remain so until the end of time.

Go there often in thought, you will be able to capture the substantial energy emanating from the place.

Live this day as best you can, avoid any useless fatigue. You have to save yourself for the visit of your protégés, they have done very good work. They have gone to great lengths to do it, thank them.

You have some things to do together, therefore you should spare yourself.
