Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, July 3, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

Being a preceptor is a vocation; the majority of them do a remarkable job, with self-sacrifice.

You who benefit from it, do not lose sight of that.

First and foremost, they work for the Master, who could himself do the cleaning of all abhyasis, but individual contacts are useful. They create points of reference for the good of all of you.

They are necessary to the Mission, an aspect of its structure that is worth underlining.

Each one of them does the best they can, considering their own personality and their family and professional situation.

We are grateful for what these men and women from all countries do to serve us and to serve humanity.

We form a whole, a big family that must remain united, in spite of some inevitable human discord; only the goal is to be considered. When you thank your Master, think of those who serve him with all their heart. This should be acknowledged at least once by commending them and by adding that this work serves their own evolution.

Blessings to you all, especially today.

We are with you.
