Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, July 24, 1999 – 8:00 a.m.

In this old Europe, one tends to mix everything up. The word 'sect' has become taboo.

The meaning of the word itself is distorted. The media do much harm by speaking about things which they do not know, and by lumping all the spiritual ways together.

Religion, even among non-practicants, still greatly influences minds.

There is what is official, that is to say, institutionalized and therefore respectable religions; and there is what is not official, not institutionalized, and therefore to be rejected.

These movements, which are supposedly not good for human beings, are then to be hunted down, without even knowing what they are all about.

The word 'sect' produces a real psychosis, quite specific to Europe, and France in particular. Whereas religions that have not done only good, in the past and even nowadays, are accepted.

That is the way it is, so many centuries of power over people's minds can't just be swept away. The teachings of the past Masters who have marked humanity have been distorted, utilized by the powers of money and personal thirsts for power.

Such is the world; everything is dirtied. These Masters gave a moral code, a code of life, spotless and beautiful, entirely oriented towards the Creator and the creature.

How many crimes were committed in the name of those teachings!

Consider all that and see the simplicity of what you have found on this path, and its contribution to your life.
