Beloved Master
Revered Babuji Maharaj

Whispers from The Brighter World

Saturday, July 31, 1999 – 10:00 a.m.

My son JM claims he loves me, and he does not take the advice I give him. In the past, this would have spared him making mistakes concerning his work. He has done a beautiful job for the Mission, which owes its establishment in the south of France to him. He has many qualities, unused. He is a fine, intelligent and educated being who should find his true place.

He is introverted, which holds him back in the fulfilment of his life as a man.

We help him as much as possible. He must free himself of his old inner demons that repress the true blossoming of his spiritual side.

Let him not forget that here we love him. He too must pass through his own trials. It is the rule of the divine game.

Your African gems are back, work is awaiting them. They will be able to exercise their respective talents. There is no time to waste; advance as quickly as you can, before unforeseen circumstances crop up and complicate things. They are ready to pounce on these manuscripts to get them into shape.

We'll stay on an optimistic note; one must always believe in humankind and not despair. The world is as it is for the moment; one must deal with it.

You all belong to a certain elite, since you have found a spiritual way that you will not regret having chosen.

It takes time, effort, and confidence in your Masters, which is well placed. You will not be disappointed.

Babuji