Monday, August 14, 2000 - 10:00 a.m.

Don't worry; you note down what we dictate to you, and yesterday, we have gone quite far. If we want to succeed, we cannot indefinitely water down our remarks. We will see what will result from this attempt. You do not have anything to fear; you simply make yourself available at our service and his service, if he agrees to our proposal. Being at service means that, in some circumstances, one should not be afraid to speak their mind. Each one of your steps is an experience; being in utmost surrender facilitates this work. By trying to do your level best and to let yourself be carried by a higher will, you advance in a more serene way. This does not prevent one from holding his responsibilities; you are not robots. One should strike the right balance in the process and thus live in harmony with oneself. While advancing in wisdom, you will obtain this result without your even realizing it and all will be well.

"Thank your collaborators who do their work with all good grace.

"My Revered Master will come later. He does not forget you."

Babuji