Monday, September 11, 2000 - 10:00 a.m.

Didn't I already tell you that there's no such thing as perfection? Your struggles towards this state are more important in our eyes than the goal itself. They generate various states that you experience, sometimes getting out of them victoriously. All the work you are doing to this end bears its fruits. Perfection granted at birth would be anachronistic here below. What is at stake and what is the reason for this incarnation? Even the missioned ones have to experience this challenge. They must face up to things and show their weaknesses in some circumstances. They are edifying for those who can understand the profound reasons for these manifestations. They partake of an evolutionary process, specific to the necessary activity of this planet. All must move, evolve, improve and sometimes retrogress to set out again on new bases. Life manifests itself by changing all the time. Humans cannot escape these laws.

"Therefore, you should consider yourself as an element among these fantastic wheels which make the world move."

Babuji