Wednesday, October 4, 2000 - 10:00 a.m.

Don't dwell on what is said in this book on channelling. The issue is complex and there are no reasonable scientific explanations of this state; the ones given do not capture the most outstanding aspects of channelling. True mediums are chosen. In old times, they were recognized and respected, more particularly in some corners of the world. Prominent personalities used to consult them and take account of this in the important decisions they had to take. Some heads of state do the same today, but they are careful not to disclose it, fearing to be the laughing stock of the ignoramuses. It's worth stressing that true mediums are rare. Do not seek to know more about this topic; further explanations would not convince obtuse people. You have better things to do; make of it what you will. Excessive materialism drives individuals away from true knowledge and the real capabilities of the human being. At the speed things are going, men will become robots one day, really completely dehumanized. Before long, the innumerable resources of the brain we have already alluded to, will not be recognized and used. Many steps remain to be cleared before reaching the Age of Enlightenment. That is the way it goes."

Babuji