Thursday, October 26, 2000 - 10:00 AM

Besides this conquest that we have just mentioned, what is more important in your life? All goes by, all blends in with the memory of time. Those events that appear to be fundamental to you today, how will they appear tomorrow? They belong to the landscape where your action takes place. They are for the most part anecdotal.

"You are the actors playing a role. Your destiny comes true and you move to something else. This is how the course of an incarnation develops. You do what was planned, in broad outline, by trying to follow the thread to your best. When this course has been completed, you leave this world and assess your life.

"What conclusions are you going to draw? In your opinion, will you be satisfied? Will you have regrets, remorse?

"By considering it from this angle and as a page of the big book wherein everything is recorded, you will perhaps get it into a more reasonable assessment.

"Every elapsed day can allow you to make the same assessment. If you know how to look backwards, you will end up attaching a relative importance to events that seemed oppressive to you, in order to focus on what is fundamental."

Babuji